Editorial Review

Review

This study on the making of foreign policy is both ground-breaking and thought-provoking... the study focuses on some very vital areas in India's contemporary foreign policy formulation and practice and should be of paramount interest to policy and decision-makers everywhere, besides recommending itself as compulsory reading to the student of IR as well as to knowledge-hungry laymen....This book could be described as raising very relevant issues which could expand the frontiers of foreign policy thinking. It is a most timely contribution to the study of foreign policy.

--The Island Online

The study contributes to our understanding of the relationship between Indian identity and foreign security policy. The book is meant for the elite experts of international relations and comparative political analysis.
